Products Liability

Barnwell Whaley represents individuals and businesses in litigation involving the design, manufacture, and sale of allegedly defective products.

The types of products we have represented have ranged in size and diversity from a hand-held lighter to large aircraft and have included medical devices, consumer products, power tools, agricultural machinery and goods such as fertilizer and seed, pharmaceutical products, industrial and heavy construction equipment including cranes and forklifts, automobiles and automobile components, trucks, watercraft, and materials that are subject to mass tort litigation such as asbestos and other chemicals.

Many of the attorneys in this practice area are not only experienced litigators, they have technical backgrounds, including several engineering disciplines and natural sciences degrees, enabling them to discuss the intricacies of products with business scientists, and communicate those differences to a jury.

Our research team analyzes each case, assessing exposure and risk of each case and the future of your business. As attorneys guide clients towards appropriate resolution techniques, they find that in some cases, mediation and arbitration is an option. However, if litigation is necessary, the Barnwell Whaley products liability team of nationally recognized defense litigators takes aggressive, thorough action to provide an effective and efficient defense.
